THOUGHT OF THE WEEK:

"AN ADDRESS BY NEIL PIGOT to the Anzac Day Gathering at Numurkah, Victoria 2018

...By coming here this morning, we are saying that we have not forgotten those 100,000 and that their sacrifice means something to us. It would be ridiculous to say that they were all saints. They were human, just like you and me. But when push came to shove they did not fall back on their vices, instead they reached for their values. And at a time when the world is experiencing such turmoil, when we can feel overwhelmed by the complexity of life in this world, I would like to think that ANZAC day could become more than just a day of celebration and remembrance. Perhaps it can be a day when we actively pay tribute to our fallen by believing, as they did, that an individual can make a difference and by renewing our commitment to those values they aspired to.

And their most passionately held ideal, what they strove and selflessly died for, was the simple notion that everyone in this world deserves the right to fulfill their promise and to live with freedom and in peace. And for that we honour every one of them."

ICELAND AND THE CORONAVIRUS: PLEASE EXPLAIN By Brian Simpson

This is surprising, and is a piece of challenging evidence against the mainstream narrative:

<https://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-8210401/Iceland-finds-half-population-asymptomatic-infected-Covid-19.html>

"Iceland has tested one-tenth of its population for coronavirus at random and found that half of people have the disease without realising. They also discovered that 1,600 people have been infected with Covid-19 since the start of the outbreak. Of these cases, there were only seven deaths, indicating a fatality rate of just 0.004 per cent, which is significantly lower than other countries, including the UK.

The findings were made during Iceland's rigorous testing campaign, conducted with the help of Reykjavik-based biopharmaceutical company deCODE genetics, which has seen 10 per cent of the 364,413 population swabbed, something yet to be achieved by any other nation. An estimated 50 per cent of those infected with the virus, the company found, do not show any symptoms. By taking this route, Reykjavik has become the country with the highest proportion of coronavirus cases in the world simply due to their extensive screenings. Meanwhile, other nations remain in the dark as to their true rates of infection.

Their approach to 'flattening the curve' has also revealed that cases are stable or on the wane, the company said. Unlike many countries in Europe such as Spain, Italy and Britain, who are facing strict isolation to prevent the spread of the disease, Iceland has not shuttered businesses and shops. They have banned large gatherings of more than 20 people but, according to reports, their social-distancing recommendations are largely being followed.

Rates of infection in Iceland mirror those further East, such as Hong Kong, Macau and Singapore, which somehow managed to keep cases low despite their geographical proximity to mainland China and high numbers of tourist arrivals. In Hong Kong, the immediate response from the public in December, tearing through shops to stock up on face masks and hand sanitizer, appears to have helped keep their case numbers low, according to experts. A combination of factors are thought to be giving Iceland the upper hand in battling Covid-19, including their remoteness, the public's respect for scientific expertise, and its emergency response capabilities."

The disease may be highly contagious, even more than previously thought, but it also shows that Covid-19 is not another Black Death or Spanish flu, which is not to discount its seriousness, most of the measures taken, or what might have happened. This Event well shows that humanity has set up the perfect environment for rapid disease transmission via neo-liberal globalisation.

HERE COMES A “MANDATORY, LUCRATIVE VACCINE”- MEDICAL MARTIAL LAW

By Chris Knight (paraphrased by ed)

This material is mostly from The Washington Times

<https://www.washingtontimes.com/news/2020/apr/8/anthony-fauci-sets-stage-mandatory-vaccine/>

“Anthony Fauci, America’s most-listened-to medical professional on the coronavirus, and apparently on all the political, economic, cultural and social precautions every man, woman and child in the nation should take on the coronavirus, has just warned what cooler-head coronavirus watchers have suspected all along: that this country may never, no never, go back to normal. Never, that is, Fauci suggested, until a vaccine is developed. And by logical extension, that’s to say — never, until a vaccine is developed that must then be included on the required list of shots for all children to attend school.

What great news for Big Pharma and Bill Gates who just announced his foundation is going to spend billions of dollars to help build factories for seven possible coronavirus vaccine makers.

“Spend” is probably the wrong word here. Invest is more like it. After all, Gates, first and foremost, is a billionaire businessman who made his billions in Microsoft and who just left his billion-dollar Microsoft enterprise to pursue other matters — specifically, to “serve humanity,” is how the Economic Times put it in a March headline.

MICHAEL SMITH NEWS - REPLY TO DENNIS THOMPSON By Betty Luks

I think because it was such hard going to fool the majority of people on 'climate change' the corona virus scare provided the perfect excuse for the government originated chaos we are now experiencing.

Ellen Brown, American lawyer writes:

The blatant disparities in the congressional response to the current crisis have shone a bright light on how our financial system is rigged against the people in favour of a wealthy elite. Crisis is when change happens; this is the time for advocates to unite in demanding change on behalf of the people.

Greek economist Yanis Varoufakis admonished:

This new phase of the crisis is, at the very least, making it clear to us that anything goes – that everything is now possible.... Whether the epidemic helps deliver the good or the most evil society will depend ... on whether progressives manage to band together. For if we do not, just like in 2008 we did not, the bankers, the spivs [petty criminals], the oligarchs and the neofascists will prove, again, that they are the ones who know how not to let a good crisis go to waste...

For a taste of how he’s already served humanity, one need only look to the disastrous Common Core one-size-fits-all, top-down education plan that his foundation bankrolled. From education to vaccinations — the service to humanity never ends.

But this is what Fauci just warned, at a White House briefing with reporters: “When we get back to normal, we will go back to the point where we can function as a society. But ... [i]f you want to get back to pre-coronavirus, that might not ever happen in the sense that the threat is there. But I believe that with the therapies that will be coming online, and the fact that I feel confident that over a period of time we will get a good vaccine, that we will never have to get back to where we are right now.” He also said this: “If back to normal means acting like there never was a coronavirus problem, I don’t think that’s going to happen until we do have a situation where you can completely protect the population.”

This — as the dire, dark, deathly numbers that sent America into coronavirus panic in the first place were just revised downward (emphasis-ed).

“America’s most influential coronavirus model just revised its estimates downward,” The Washington Post reported.” <https://www.washingtonpost.com/health/2020/04/06/americas-most-influential-coronavirus-model-just-revised-its-estimates-downward-not-every-model-agrees/>

Gates’ obsession with vaccines seems to be fuelled by a conviction of saving the world by technology. ***

World events over the last three months reminded me of the following paraphrased portions from chapters 17-18 of the Book of Revelation, written over two thousand years ago! So what has changed?

The Great Harlot:

“The Grand Madam of Babylon was drunk and in maudlin mood. She sat on her throne beside the meeting place of abundant waters from many rivers. All peoples, all nations congregated here in submissive obeisance to her. All the kings and rulers of the world had come to her and committed fornication with her. All the dwellers of the earth had offered tribute to her and become drunk with the wine of her dalliance and adulterous deceit. All the world was hers. Why were her dreams now plagued with visions of impending doom, of disease and death, of sadness of mourning, of famine and fire? Fire raged in her capital Babylon, totally destroying it in one hour. Traders and merchants remained standing at a safe distance, mourning and weeping in distress at the destruction of her city and their massive loss of merchandise and trade. She had seen too, trading boats keeping well clear of her port. All their captains and sailors loudly lamented the demise of that magnificent city which had brought such wealth to those who owned fleets at sea. Now, in her nightmare, she was being doubly repaid in her own coin for all that she had exacted unjustly from others. She was being made to drink a double dose of her own poisonous mixture. . .”

The Roman civilisation finally collapsed and the barbarians took over about a hundred years later - but all the signs were already there. Now the BIG QUESTION is: What are we going to do about this situation. Are we going to let our politicians get away with it - or not?

THE PROBLEM OF TEETH: DISEASE OF OVER-CIVILISATION By Mrs Vera West

Dr Weston Price (1870-1948), warned humanity that most modern Western dental problems were a product of the over-civilised diets of the West, high sugar, refined foods that did not exercise the jaw, and were unhealthy in themselves, especially refined white sugar - the white death. He studied native populations at the time of the early 20th century, and found that they had healthy teeth, until eating Western high sugar diets, after which their dental health disintegrated, literally. Now it seems that the establishment is catching up to Dr Price:

https://www.scientificamerican.com/article/

why-we-have-so-many-problems-with-our-teeth/

“Our dental issues are not normal. Most other vertebrate creatures do not have the same dental problems that we do. They rarely have crooked teeth or cavities. Our fossil forebears did not have impacted wisdom teeth, and few appear to have had gum disease. Indeed, the teeth of modern-day humans are a profound contradiction. They are the hardest parts of our body yet are incredibly fragile. Although teeth endure for millions of years in the fossil record, ours cannot seem to last a lifetime in our mouths. Teeth gave our ancestors dominance over the organic world, yet today ours require special daily care to be maintained. The contradiction is new and is limited largely to industrial-age and contemporary populations. It is best explained by a mismatch between today’s diets and those for which our teeth and jaws evolved. Paleontologists have long understood that our teeth are deeply rooted in evolutionary history. Now clinical researchers and dental practitioners are also starting to take notice.

To understand why the teeth of modern-day humans are so prone to decay, we need to consider the natural oral environment. The healthy mouth is teeming with life, populated by billions of microbes representing up to 700 different species of bacteria alone. Most are beneficial. They fight disease, help with digestion and regulate various bodily functions. Other bacteria are harmful to teeth, such as mutans streptococci and Lactobacillus. They attack enamel with lactic acid produced during their metabolism. But concentrations of these bacteria are usually too low to cause permanent damage. Their numbers are kept in check by their commensal cousins, the mitis and sanguinis streptococcal groups. These bacteria produce alkalis (chemicals that raise pH), as well as antimicrobial proteins that inhibit the growth of harmful species. Saliva buffers the teeth against acid attack and bathes them in calcium and phosphate to remineralize their surface. The balance between demineralization and remineralization has held for hundreds of millions of years, and both beneficial and harmful bacteria are found in oral microbiomes across the mammalian order. We evolved to maintain a stable community of microbes, as Kevin Foster of the University of Oxford and his colleagues have put it, to “keep the ecosystem on a leash.”

Caries results when the leash breaks. Diets rich in carbohydrates feed acid-producing bacteria, lowering oral pH. Mutans streptococci and other harmful species thrive in the acidic environment they produce, and they begin to swamp beneficial bacteria, further reducing pH. This chain of events leads to what clinical researchers call dysbiosis, a shift in balance wherein a few harmful species out-compete those that normally dominate the oral microbiome. Saliva cannot remineralize enamel fast enough to keep up, and the equilibrium between loss and repair is shot. Sucrose—common sugar—is especially problematic. Harmful bacteria use it to form a thick, sticky plaque that binds them to teeth and to store energy that feeds them between meals, meaning the teeth suffer longer exposure to acid attack. Bioarchaeologists have long suggested a link between caries and the transition from foraging to farming within the past 10,000 years or so during the Neolithic period because acid-producing bacteria consume fermentable carbohydrates, which abound in wheat, rice and corn. For example, studies of dental remains led by Clark Larsen of the Ohio State University found a more than sixfold increase in the incidence of caries with the adoption and spread of maize agriculture along the prehistoric Georgia coast. The link between tooth decay and agriculture is not that simple, though. Caries rate varies among early farmers over time and space, and the teeth of some hunter-gatherers, such as those with honey-rich diets, are riddled with cavities. The biggest jump in the caries rate came with the Industrial Revolution, which led to the widespread availability of sucrose and highly processed foods. In recent years researchers have conducted genetic studies of bacteria entombed in tartar on ancient teeth that document the ensuing transition in microbial communities. Processed foods are also softer and cleaner, setting up a perfect storm for caries: less chewing to cut the organic film and fewer dietary abrasives to wear away the nooks and crannies in teeth where plaque bacteria take refuge.”

For most of us, the better teeth days are behind us. ***

JAPAN SAYS GOODBYE TO CHINESE GLOBALISM By James Reed

Globalism has always, at least in the late part of the 20th century been about Asianisation, mainly dominance by China. We have seen this in Australia, with first the propaganda machine getting going once multiculturalism had broken the back of Anglo-Australia, then with the Asianisation part of Asia ideology, then open endorsement of being a colony of China, prelude to total replacement. But, Japan is proudly returning to nationalism:

<https://www.scmp.com/news/asia/east-asia/article/3079126/japan-pay-firms-leave-china-relocate-production-elsewhere-part>

"Japan has earmarked US$2.2 billion of its record economic stimulus package to help its manufacturers shift production out of China, as the coronavirus disrupts supply chains between the major trading partners. The extra budget, compiled to try to offset the devastating effects of the pandemic, includes 220 billion yen (US$2 billion) for companies shifting production back to Japan and 23.5 billion yen for those seeking to move production to other countries, according to details of the plan posted online. --->>>

VACCINATION DECISIONS

By J. Wilyman PhD

extract...Ethical Medical Conduct:

The Doctors Ethical Code of Conduct under the World Medical Association states "Doctors must not use their medical knowledge to remove human rights". (emph-ed)

...On the 1 May 2020 the Australian government is mandating the flu vaccine for adults in healthcare situations, many areas of employment and for visitors to aged-care facilities. This is legislation that will harm the health of many Australians and the Prime Minister, Scott Morrison, has refused under the FOIA to release the evidence that the government relied upon to enact mandatory vaccination for children to attend school in 2015.

The government also added "forced vaccination" to the Biosecurity Act in 2015 without the Australian community's knowledge. (emphasis-ed)

I believe the reason why the Australian government declared a "pandemic" of a disease on 21 January 2020 prior to the WHO (11 March 2020), when Australia did not have a single case of this new disease in the country, was because on the 14 January 2020 the concerned Australian community had submitted a petition opposing all coercive and discriminatory vaccination policies.

This petition was read out in the Australian parliament on 10 February 2020 and referred to the Minister of Health, Greg Hunt, for his response.... Mandatory vaccination is not a solution to any infectious disease and we want the Health Minister, Greg Hunt, to address our petition against mandatory vaccination before the 1 May 2020.

The move coincides with what should have been a celebration of friendlier ties between the two countries. Chinese President Xi Jinping was supposed to be on a state visit to Japan early this month. But what would have been the first visit of its sort in a decade was postponed a month ago amid the spread of the novel coronavirus and no new date has been set. China is Japan's biggest trading partner under normal circumstances, but imports from China slumped by almost half in February as the disease closed factories, in turn starving Japanese manufacturers of necessary components. That has renewed talk of Japanese firms reducing their reliance on China as a manufacturing base. The government's panel on future investment last month discussed the need for manufacturing of high-added value products to be shifted back to Japan, and for production of other goods to be diversified across Southeast Asia."

Moves like this will trim a rather over-weight dragon down to size. ***

THE BLIGHT OF OUR EMPIRE

By Bruce H. Brown

WHAT HAPPENED IN 1929?

- The New Times, page 3 NOVEMBER 29, 1935

This rather opens up the events of 1929 to a little light. You will remember that three important things happened suddenly in that year. Loans were refused for Governments, prices fell, and banks called in overdrafts. Is it sensible any longer to blame God or Nature for that?

When loans stopped, Government works stopped. When prices fell, farmers were ruined and the banks got their properties. When overdrafts were called in, industry became stagnant and thousands were made bankrupt. Each of these three things brought about a serious curtailment of the amount of purchasing power in circulation, and the cumulative effect of the three together was simply disastrous from the point of view of the community... ***
